

Moonsauce

- Bitcoin is going to the moon. Sure, it's dropped for now after the Japanese carry trade breakdown, and we're maybe due for some consolidation for a while, but long-term, it's going to the moon (I'm a mega Bitcoin bull). Your sauce, just like Bitcoin, can be a hedge against inflation (the inflation of Heinz Ketchup in this case).

Ketcoin

- Quite an obvious one here, but I think that's the best approach to take with this job. The C in 'ketchup' is perfect for the 'coin' add-on word. An alternative would be:
- KetBit

Condimoon

- Another idea with the 'moon' element included, this time merging it with the word 'condiment'. Super simple stuff.

Pumpsauce

- Pump or dump. Everyone loves a pump. BTC holders especially. Your sauce will pump the sauce onto people's food, improving it massively. Just like when BTC pumps, it improves everyone's bags.

BSauce

- I can't type out the Bitcoin logo on here, but in this case, the B in this name is supposed to be the Bitcoin logo, so imagine it as such. Super simple name, but would work perfectly explaining what your sauce is and what it's inspired by.

Liquid Bitcoin

- Based on the term 'liquidity'. Liquidity is the measure of how much demand and supply (bids and asks) there is on the order books for a particular coin. A high liquidity coin has many available buyers and sellers at the same time. And of course, you're making a sauce, which is a liquid. Merge those things together and you have Liquid Bitcoin. You could also swap the words and have:
- Bitcoin Liquid

21 Squeeze

- There is a 21 million supply of BTC that exist. This number will never increase and more will never be made. It's a number that nicely represents BTC. I've chosen squeeze because not only do you squeeze ketchup from the bottle, but it references a phrase in trading known as a short squeeze. This refers to when short positions are being liquidated in the upwards direction. It forces rapid and uncontrolled buying activity which leads to dramatic increases in price. Anyway, these are two BTC and crypto-relevant terms that make up a great name for your sauce.

ChupCoin

- Combination ideas seem to be working well for this job. As you can probably tell, I've taken 'chup' from ketchup and merged it with the 'coin' in Bitcoin.

Drizzle DYOR

- Do you own research. A very common phrase in financial spaces, cryptocurrency included. A very true statement. When I first got into crypto back in 2022, I blindly bought SHIB because some guy on YouTube said it was going to the moon. All it did was bleed out and I lost my money within a few weeks. Expensive lesson learned, and I've done my own research ever since. Anyway, people can drizzle their own DYOR all over their food, just like they should drizzle their DYOR all over their investments.

Proof Of Sauce

- BTC is a PoW digital currency, unlike ETH which is proof of stake. Your ketchup will be sauce, and proven to be so when people taste it. There's no staking with your sauce, it's just a sauce that works on most foods people put it on.